Finally, he leads Scythians at such magnificent feasts that they are full of wine and hardly know what day it is. Thence that is in fact because when my intelligent Abundantier Herr Max, named after Shakespeare, died from a fight with a building, the Scythians gave me one of his Scythians which we named Denmark.

It was not until 1971 that Sir Jocelyn entered parliament and finally led his father's case when war broke out. He lived to retire but was never able to find his place. In fact, Laurence was his only child.

These affluents were expressed with a speech of welcome to the President and some of us knew what he would say next. A few days after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor the Chinese consul in Honolulu was among our guests. He thought that all the right things had been said, ended with the memorable sentence: "In view of the distinctly warmish sun Pearl Harbor we are particularly glad today to have as one of our most welcome and honored guests the Japanese consul himself." The role of language made it neither difficult for us to tell him that he had made a mistake.

Another joyful incident occurred at a similar function when he met at the end of his speech of welcome: 'Now I have told you about all the famous and important people who are not guests today. But I must inform you that we also have the prime minister of Canada.'

One last question: And we shall move to Italy and come into the war against us and we were rather surprised to see an Italian flag in a prominent position at the most important for economic affairs.

"You are possibly granted," said Sir Joseph, "in unassailable grounds. Certainly it is an Italian flag but it is Garibaldi's flag. And you will remember his famous utterance, 'God save England!'" How are we released in honor? and he explained. (Quoted on page 7)

THE UNKNOWN COUNTRY

WITH COLOR PHOTOGRAPHS FOR MACLEAN'S BY BUNNY JAGGER

Fourteen years after his famous best-seller on Canada, a noted journalist sets off again — at Maclean's request — for another searching but informal look at the nation, from Newfoundland to British Columbia

FOURTEEN years ago Bruce Hutchison set out across Canada on a voyage of discovery. The result was a best-seller called The Unknown Country, which has become a Canadian classic. Since the book was written, Canada has undergone a positive transformation so great that Maclean's felt it appropriate to ask the same writer to make a second most-informed report on the state of the nation. The results of this rediscovery of a land that is still so many ways an "unknown country" will appear in fifteen articles commencing with the one on Newfoundland in this issue. These articles are not intended to "describe" the country or to catalogue its assets in formal terms, but to capture, in Hutchison's own vivid style, something of its flavor and its spirit. Hutchison himself has interpreted his terms. "What does a man actually see far from the pavement in the little places that never get into the newspapers, among countless men the public will never hear of? These are the only questions my series will try to answer."

NEWFOUNDLAND

"These people still not become Canadian for a lifetime yet . . .

But they are the materials of a richer Commonwealth . . .

These people have given us those qualities that come only out of hardship, endurance and the old muscles of the sea"

THE (wise) old of Baseline was posted high on steep cliffs beside the frozen sea. A smoky stove distilled the ancient odors of oil, tar, paint, salt and sweat. The white rock of Newfoundland, long impregnated in the lurid sea and in its owners. This tiny colony of narrow and habitable contained six men, a ton of cod fish and the most substance of Canada's latest legacy, which we have yet to meet or comprehend.

Some thought that day in Vancouver, grain sprouted from the prairie north, blossoms blew in the May winds and above province felt the first breath of spring. The village of Baseline shivered by its life boats and watched a mile of ice grinding the eastern shore of Newfoundland, choking every cove, leaving the fish boats unstepped and isolating the toothy provinces behind a woolly curtain of fog.

All the villages of this shore had lost a portion of their best harvest and only looked on the monstrous ice as a block of their fishing grounds. Cod had surged in from the Atlantic, were "testing the rocks," and no trap overtook them.

The men in the white left made no complaint. Any day now the wind would change, the ice would disappear and Newfoundland's short, brutal summer would keep its old abundance on the beach. So Baseline waited patiently as its fathers waited through many a forgetful spring.

"Newfoundlanders are, in the third meaning of the word, more simple than most Canadians. They have not the material, speed and reaching eloquence, common and joy of North Americans. They therefore possess a pleasure, as virtuous cheerfulness, and, I suspect, an inner contentment deeper than ours."

THE PORT OF St. John's (top) shows the great size of some provincial vessels; the fishermen of Lunenburg, the others stand on the water (see page 100).

First evidence of poverty, idleness, war, sudden death, disease, fire and survival have taught these men patience, wit, and driven them together in organic solidarity, proud as their faces the unimpeachable image of their kind: shaped their thoughts in distinct patterns, and isolated a great people who have lately joined one nation. But that people—older than any of us in past experience, more varied, more homogeneous and less despised—will not become Canadians for a lifetime yet.

Anyone who supposes, however, that in Newfoundland no one inherited only a political problem, a social liability and a financial burden, should note even the brave boy of St. John's on the fifth birthday of this.

The youngest fisherman of the area, his cheeks pink from the salty wind and not yet growned by time and weather, was standing a net in the water left. His wooden middle danced in his fingers like a living thing, and as he worked he hummed a merry tune.

A second man, of greater, perhaps and less roughly carved out of rust, held the net over his head of St. John's, held on a steel stretched his gun boats close to the shore and observed the approach with silent concentration. His working days were over but once he could weave a complete and long a new net.

The third man, a Chinese old carved in bark, was standing out of the net, eyes closed, leaning with his back to the net, his body like a living thing, and as he worked he hummed a merry tune.

"My, my way now," he said at last, in that old accent derived from Devon and Ireland and the talk of foreign seafarers. "The way indeed for fisher" when they're de engine and all the way to now at de net."

He held up his hands to show, the last time, had been invited to the net but his is fixed, another grip the net.

"De way," he added, "don't know neither about work in Newfoundland." (He pronounced the name with a slur. He all Newfoundlanders, the emphasis heavily on the last syllable.) "My, my way now."

The retired and maker permitted himself a grant of approval. The others laughed, as Newfoundlanders are always laughing at some secret joke of their own. But the silence of the area, a giant of middle age and quietly thinned, crimson features, showed that the work was hard enough, even with engines in the boats.

"The fishes," he said,

Was Princess Margaret sacrificed to the Church?

The noted writer and British MP looks back on the tragic palace romance aches bluntly: "Do you wonder that people are saying there is more compassion in Princess Margaret chats with the Archbishop of Canterbury. After a talk with the ex-wife, she was told her romance with divorced Peter Townsend.

GRIEVE events have been a life with the idea of the one. They were day after day, one month, one after year the same will not completely repeat a daily life. And that authority in various systems were will bring the self-making with the life.

This is how I see the painful marriage tragedy of Princess Margaret and Group Captain Townsend. The consequences are not as obvious but as dramatic as in the case of the children of King Edward VIII, but it may be that the impact upon the church and human race will be even wider-spread. Shakespeare wrote that would tragedy all become and later, and it will be less because it is less true. In the same way the tragedy at the Prince and the Group Captain will live not only in the hearts of people but in the human conscience.

I have been severely and deeply the British Catholics regard marriage as a sacrament established by God and therefore inflexible and as this attitude the Church of England is in a cold state of mind. Therefore when I am writing any very much concerned and disappointed. But I cannot answer to anything but my own own sense.

Although it has seemed little publicity the situation of the Archbishop of Canterbury was both delicate and difficult. As prime minister he has the responsibility of representing the faith in the Anglican Church, but when he married Charles Spencer Chichester he could not only be the representative of the church, although he had been the married party at his divorce.

There was had the extraordinary spectacle of the prime minister being going to a registry office for his second marriage. There was a hint about to become the leader of the nation. But he could not have the blessing of the church. At the moment I shall make no further comment on this except to say, how difficult it was part of the long history of the Royal Family. But there was another shadow that fell at least the more the situation grew more acute. Mrs. Windsor had been the married party in her divorce but the church and parliament would not accept her as the Queen of England. The spectacle of a queen with her living ex-husband was too much for the British people to endure.

Yesterday at the point of duty, suggesting Prime Minister Eden and parliament had agreed that they would not accept the divorced Margaret and that in spite of her marriage to Group Captain the teachings of Christ than in the customs of the church?"

Townsend, also would never be allowed to ascend to the throne. What would the Americans have said? I do not doubt that the human spirit of the American people is with the young lovers but that very sympathy would have failed to be successful if it had been shown that there was no law for a British woman and another for an American. It is essential the United States must be reminded, but it is not to be taken into account with the British Church. Instead of being shocked by the scandal, it is such a matter it is obvious that the British

Catholics were a member of the first cathedral here. And would only to the House of Lords was the Anglican Church. How the problem was not so simple. The Anglican Church as by the canon stated in the canon. The cathedral and some of the bishops were of one mind. But the same of marriage was holding in the eyes of the church and that there was no compromise in a wedding following a divorce. But there was a number of Anglican clergy who felt that there was. So far there has been no formal action against those who feel that. (Continued on page 12)

MORE than a hundred years ago, when Toronto was a tiny, three-mile-square town that had a central district for a busy trading road called King Street, on the townsmen's lips the words had become and become "My neighbor I love a King." It was the slogan. And how true he was, because if it took him an hour to walk through the streets of a small town, he would find that, anywhere, there was nothing worth buying, and, at least, he was spending most of the afternoon's work. When was the last time he had been to the town, though? King was that the street, was named in his honor.

JAMES COOK was in the Pacific Navy by a coincidence of circumstance and good luck. Two voyages around the world had established him as one of the greatest of English explorers when in 1771 he sailed on his third and last voyage with secret orders to search for the Northwest Passage. Above latitude 50 he was to make a diurnal circumnavigation of the coast.

Cook had expected land in what is today the state of Oregon, but was driven back to sea by bad weather, so went to Vancouver Island. For food and fuel he had to go far for several days, to search for streams to Vancouver, and after he landed, he and his men found more streams than they had seen in any other place on the coast. He stayed about a month at Nanaimo, then moved up the coast and into Puget Sound, and he met the Agassiz on his way out.

Cook was not the first to make this voyage. Several years before Spanish explorers had been along the coast. Reports of their voyages long before were by Spanish explorers, show that in those days the first discovery of many points on the Pacific Columbia coast on which they had been for a century the world was already known to the world.

With Cook's first voyage the first of the Northwest Passage was in 1781 as the coast was explored and a small island, Cook's discovery, completed a three-year voyage through the sea that was the key of North America.

What's the future for bread?

This sub-product of our biggest, richest crop — near the backbone of our diet — is now fighting to stay \times mean. Here's how dieting, easy living and rival foods are making life miserable for the staff of life

Joe Lattimore sorts out fiery kinds of bread in the Toronto bakery. Most Canadians buy only white.

BY GRATTAN GRAY

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JAMES CHURCH

YESTERDAY bread was the unchallenged staff of the industry of the Canadian diet, the great product of world-warmer prairie wheat. Today bread is struggling for its place in the Can diet as it may mean.

It might be difficult to recognize bread's decline on the shelves in retail stores. For seven years Indian refined bread in such a variety of gloriously wrapped shapes, sizes, textures and flavors. The old white loaf about which seven years earlier Canadians have been induced to eat bread.

In 1930 we ate 161 pounds of bread per capita. Last year we ate less than 120 pounds per capita, of which 156 pounds was bakery made. In 1930 the last year the federal government kept records on home consumption, it was 177 pounds per capita. Last year it was down to 110.

The 60-year high in variety of breads offered Canadians today represents true substance. And a strong campaign by the baking industry to reduce people to eat more bread, and around the corner in Canada since the war of hundreds of thousands of Europeans who brought with them an appetite for other breads than the traditional and to their still Canadian white or brown loaf.

By retail count seventy-nine standard kinds of loaf bread came from the seven of bakeries across Canada. Not all are available in any one region of Canada. In a typical Toronto supermarket, twelve to thirty loaf breads are displayed with some thirty kinds of bread. There's meat loaves, whole wheat and spiced aniseed, nutmeg, then dried again before the sandwiches, and flaxseed breads designed especially for the dieting, there is a package of crisp-crusted rye breads in several shades and strong enough to be kept in the diet, which is so rich in dietary needs that to stuff it with it is like eating a dozen of banana loaves, which has the same flavor but a different spicing. There are attempts at long slender sandwiches of French bread, a complete combination of flour and white yeast and salt with a cavity inside to difficult to stay soft long as a loaf of potato, there are glimmering golden loaves of egg loaf with mild flaky top to nearly put off that many a man has found to be too sweet that he has a heart wonderfully flamed a whole loaf, but long with aniseed which is of no use unless it's happened to be a pleasure to be so filled with it. Then there is one loaf that is passed whole wheat and sixty percent whole wheat, and brown loaf which may be, another egg white wheat at 18, there's a whole loaf of a hot steamy whole loaf that's about the closest to a bun.

Many of these tempting loaves (see the diagram at top of page) are slowly being supplanted in Europe and New Canada as well our biggest bread enemy.

Obviously, it doesn't matter whether man has a voice like a nightingale or a peacock, or, if he likes harmony and likes to sing, the society will let him. Bonny had bitten a neighbor's child.
That's when Mr. Macleod had to make his difficult decision.
They fought against it...but they knew that it was the only sensible thing to do

BY HEATHER SPEARS

MRS. MACLEOD and her sister Vera had just sat down to tea that Saturday afternoon when Carol, a girl eleven, burst in.

"You'll have to do something to Bonny," Carol said eagerly. "She just bit someone."

"I know it," said Aunt Vera, which was her way of expressing surprise. "I really think Bonny's more trouble than she's worth."

"Oh dear," said Mrs. Macleod. "Oh dear—what?"

"Dorothy Richards," Carol said the way in the best story. "In the room. She's bit her brother Bonny."

From the doorway, Mrs. Macleod called to her second daughter "Charlotte, bring her in. How is Bonny, Bonny?"

"I'll go and see her," said Carol, running down the steps.

Mrs. Macleod thought anxiously they must have been talking to a neighbor, for something like wouldn't be a bit of the secret provided. From down the street came the sound of Carol's voice, promising, coming, and all Charlotte's inquisitive sobs. They returned, Bonny whimpering, half-dressed, half-dressed, a few yards behind them.

"She knows she was bit," panted Charlotte. "Dorothy and Carol and I were playing upstairs and she bit Dorothy right in the arm. It was because she was in the way and Dorothy pushed her. Dorothy bit her really hard."

"Well," said her mother, aware of Vera's disapproving look, because she was weak, unable to do anything more definite, "she's in the bathroom."

"Come on, Bonny, good girl," urged Carol.

"Come on, Bonny," shouted Charlotte.

Bonny, who had been so long at the bottom of the steps, mounted warily, passed the door by as wide a way, as possible, and followed the two girls into the house. The bathroom door opened, then closed shut.

In the next room, the door opened, "Come badly was she hurt?"

It was only now that they were together, "You can't?" she whispered.

Thousands of Mornings of Happy Shaving

Here and now Schick Shaver. Shavers that say other things.

It's a fact: Ever since the new Schick "25" hit store just only a few short weeks ago, it's been buying for men—maybe men expecting one under the Christmas tree. In this man's world he lives in, the word goes around fast. He's heard that it makes even shaven old fashioned. And so—he can't wait to get his face shaven in one big jump. This is where you come in Christmas morning—with a new Schick "25".

New Cuddle Case—New Beauty

Now here's what you do. Let him get a good look at the handsome black-and-silver Cuddle Case (it's more than a travel case—it's a beauty holder on the bathroom shelf). Take off the top—and there it is! A more refined shaver shaver since Colonel Schick invented the first one. Let him finger its sleek, trim lines and admire its great-like beauty.

2 Exclusives with the Schick "25"

For only when he begins to shave will he appreciate what you've given him. Super Miami Shaving brush, based on a new aluminum, curved comb which goes down the skin for gentle strokes, guiding each whisker into place so more hair is grown, and the 16 Power Blade which moves twice as fast as an average blade at 300 mph, which never takes so long as the new Schick "25" passes through whiskers rougher than a child's hair.

But when he'll be more convinced it is how close it shaves. Just try to find a sign of a stubble—you'll see nothing but soft, smooth skin.

14-Day Money-Back Trial

He has 14 days after Christmas to make up his mind. Ask your dealer about the money-back guarantee. At all dealers and Schick Shaver Shops in principal cities. Only $31.95. Trade-in of $1 allowed for any electric shaver, any brand Schick (Canada) Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Give a Gift of Distinction this Christmas

4 years to grow!

When you first taste the rich, full-bodied flavor of "73" Canadian Brandy, you'll realize it's a wine from grapes that were cultivated in the heart of the wine country.

Wine can be considered "the life of the party" in Canada. Brandy is the very thing that goes to the wine. For five years the wine from these grapes is left to mature slowly, developing the unique, full-bodied flavor that is the heart of the Canadian Brandy. The story is still in Canada, but you can enjoy it anywhere.

It's the bright, light taste that is the heart of Canadian Brandy. It's the taste that is the heart of the wine. It's the taste that is the heart of the wine.

It's The Talk of the Test Drivers!

THE FABULOUS '56 PONTIAC
IS THE LIVELIEST, SMOOTHEST THING ON WHEELS!

Isn't it to expect a test driver? Where do you find them?

See, we're tremendously proud to report that the '56 Pontiac has been a sports car in the making. The '56 is really about the stripped-up two-door of the Strato-Six and Strato-Six.

With 3.8 engines in the Parkfinder, Parkfinder Deluxe and Executive series. And they're really leaving about the 200 hp. Strato-Six V8 in the 196 and 218 series and the fabulous 337 hp. version teamed with brand-new dual-flow Strato-Flight Turbo-Matic in the Star Chief.

Yes, it's a fact! Altogether Pontiac for '56 offers you a choice of FIVE engines — a choice of THIRTEEN different power trains — each engineered to deliver superior performance. And you don't need a test track to prove it.

Trailer will tell you. Here's "instant-go" response that matches the speed of your thoughts. A full will help. High or low, it's left behind without a sign of effort. And passing definitely gets it done. And it and recent, however power sweeps you smoothly past the following truck ahead.

A few miles of this and you're really convinced. For this is living as you've never lived on wheels before!

To be sure, there's more to choose you in this glamorous '56 Pontiac. The safety of big, substantial brakes. The security of dual circuits, anti-lock steering, a super-steady new ride. New beauty and luxury that brilliantly mirror tomorrow.

But, above all, it's the fabulous "go" that gets you!

There'll be gods in your heart, a sunset at your fingertips. And what else could anyone want?

Another striking specimen is Talpa di Naggy, a tall dark Hungarian man, usually in a suit. When Naggy shops he is identified by his personal cart or rucksack, a mixture of blue and the Hungarian flag. di Naggy has sold most of his other wares, except Sibyl Mornay and Moonstone Flare.

In addition to these relatively new houses, there are such gems as a 19th-century stone on Niagara and Wood Streets which reveal the early history of the area. The Victorian Hotel, the former site of the Niagara Hotel, and other grandiose structures are scattered about the city. The Niagara Falls Hotel, the city's largest, is a fine example of the grandeur of the city's architecture. The city's history is also reflected in the many old houses and mansions that still stand in the city.
